Juvenile Dermatomyositis is a rare autoimmune disease that affects approximately 5,000 children in the United States. JDM attacks children of all ages, causing a variety of debilitating symptoms including:

- Muscle weakness and pain
- Severe fatigue
- Rashes
- Swallowing and digestive difficulties
- Lung and heart problems
- Vasculitic ulcers
- Calcinosis

Some children may experience a remission, while others will battle JM their entire life, and complications from this disease can prove fatal. Medication can help to alleviate the symptoms of JM, but there is no known cure.
