Molly is 22 years old. She began having bad headaches and double vision in late November 2007. She was admitted to John Hopkins Hospital on December 1, 2007 and soon thereafter was diagnosed with a rare and difficult to treat neurological condition called Psuedotumor Cerbri. After 17 days of intense testing, diagnosis, attempted brain surgery and treatments Molly was released with no improvement and while making minor progress, she is living with debilitating migraines and impaired vision. She has been unable to work since late November 2007 and the doctors project a slow recovery. When Molly was admitted to John Hopkins she had poor insurance so her parents put her on their COBRA insurance which has become expensive, and with the medications she is on her medical bills are piling up. Molly is an amazing person. When healthy Molly is one of those people you love to be around. She is so full of laughter and spunk and would do anything for just about anyone. Her friends and family admire her courage, strength and willingness to keep a positive attitude while she struggles daily. Please join us as we raise money to help Molly with her expenses I promise it will be a great time!
